

Acknowledgement

I would like to take this opportunity to thank a number of people who have supported me in many ways during the preparation and completion of my dissertation.

My special thanks go to Prof. Dr. Regina Egetenmeyer, who has supported me over the past years with her intensive, constructive and motivating supervision and valuable feedback. I would like to thank Prof. Dr. Silke Grafe from the University of Würzburg for taking on the second review. I would like to thank Prof. Dr. Jens Dreßler for chairing the examination committee and Dr. Lisa Breitschwerdt for preparing the minutes. I would also like to thank my colleagues and fellow doctoral students at the University of Würzburg for the fruitful exchange, the constructive feedback and their motivating words.

At the University of Florence, my special thanks go to Prof. Dr. Vanna Boffo for her valuable supervision and support as well as for her warm hospitality during my teaching and research stay at the university. I would also like to thank Prof. Dr. Fabio Togni, who was part of the examination committee and especially supported me in gaining deeper insights into internationalisation at the University of Florence. Furthermore, I want to thank my colleagues and fellow doctoral students at the University of Florence for their great hospitality, support and helpful insights into the studies and life at the university.

At the University of Belgrade, I would like to thank my colleagues at the Department of Pedagogy and Andragogy for the many years of cooperation, the outstanding hospitality during my research stay and the support for this research project. In particular, I want to thank Prof. Dr. Aleksandra Pejatović and Prof. Dr. Katarina Popović.

My sincere thanks are extended to the participants of the focus groups and graduates of the master's programmes for their support and openness. It was only through their participation that this research project could be realised. I would also like to thank the editorial office of Dr. Meißl for proofreading the dissertation and the editorial office of Firenze University Press for their valuable support in the publication process.

This dissertation was supported by an Erasmus+ scholarship from the University of Würzburg for a six-month study visit to the University of Florence and two one-week research and teaching visits to the University of Florence and University of Belgrade. The Overhead Programme for the promotion of young academics at the Faculty of Human Sciences at the University of Würzburg supported my participation in a conference for the presentation of the dissertation project, the final editing, and publication of this thesis. For the transcription of the interviews, I was provided with funds from the Equal Opportunities Commission of the Faculty of Human Sciences at the University of Würzburg. These opportunities were very conducive and motivating for the advancement of this dissertation.

Finally, special thanks go to Boris, Kle Löwerich, my entire family and friends who have always supported and encouraged me during these intense years. They have played a big part in making it possible to complete this work.
