

Authors

Andrea Christofidou is an associate member of Worcester College and an honorary member of Keble College, Oxford, and works on metaphysics, the self, and early modern philosophy, especially Descartes.

Hanoch Ben-Yami is professor at the Central European University. His recent work is on logic and language, on various issues in the philosophy of mind, on questions of space and time in the context of modern physics, on Descartes, and on Wittgenstein.

Jil Muller is assistant professor and deputy head of the Center for History of Women Philosophers and Scientists at the University of Paderborn. She has worked on the edition of the Paris manuscript of Du Châtelet's Institutions de physique.

Deborah Brown is professor of philosophy and director of the University of Queensland's Critical Thinking Project. Her research covers the history of philosophy, metaphysics, epistemology, and philosophy of mind.

Brian Key is professor of developmental neurobiology and head of Brain Growth and Regeneration Lab, The University of Queensland. He has extensive experience in comparative neurology employing model organisms (fish, frogs and rodents).

Adi Eyal-Lautenschläger teaches at the Beit Berl College and at the University of Tel Aviv. Currently she is a post-doc fellow at the University of Bar Ilan. Her fields of interest are early modern philosophy, French philosophy, philosophy of education, and epistemology of the humanities.

Raffaele Carbone is associate professor at the Federico II University of Naples, and fellow at the Nantes Institute for Advanced Study. His research specializes in early modern philosophy (Montaigne, Malebranche, Spinoza) and its twentieth-century reception, and in the Frankfurt School.

Antonella Del Prete is professor of history of philosophy at the University of Turin. She has extensively published in the history of Cartesianism, libertinism, and biblical hermeneutics. She is currently working on seventeenth-century skepticism.

Andrea Sangiacomo is associate professor of philosophy at the University of Groningen and professor by special appointment at the Erasmus University Rotterdam on the chair “The Actuality of Spinoza.” He is PI of the ERC project “The Normalization of Natural Philosophy.”